Krak stuffed the sheep with sulphur.

Krak became king and built a castle on top of Wawel Hill.

The king sent messengers to announce that anyone who could rid his country of the dragon could marry his beautiful daughter.

In a cave at the bottom of Wawel Hill there once lived a terrible, fire-breathing dragon.

Krak shouted and threw stones at the dragon.

Krak, a shoemaker's apprentice, came to the king.

Krak and the princess were married.

The dragon exploded with a sound heard for miles around.

The dragon drank from the river until he was as swollen as a balloon.

The dragon ate the stuffed sheep.

Krak told the king that he would try to slay the dragon
